Organising and Motivating for Occupational Health & Safety, 30 - 31 January 2020 – The Mandovi Hotel, Goa

PERSPECTIVE

Motivation is an art of getting people to do things more effectively. Traditional Management Practices for better performance rest on intro-psychic mode of human behavior. It implies that majority of accidents are due to human errors and that initiative for better safety performance lie with workers.

However, effective organizational planning is essential for success in accident prevention at workplace. This requires a thorough knowledge of the modern techniques and methods of accident prevention as well as organizational and human aspects involved which would help in better organizing and motivating for safety.

National Safety Council is organizing this 2 day Training Programme on “Organising and Motivating for Occupational Health & Safety” deals with important principles, techniques and methods to be adopted in managing and organising safety at workplace.

OBJECTIVE

The program will enable participants:

➢ To understand Human aspects to establish a safety culture in which employees themselves help promote proper safety procedures while on the job.
➢ To discuss practical aspects of the implementation of the legal requirements.
➢ To discuss their problems and exchange ideas and experience.

TOPICS

➢ Occupational Safety and Health Management
➢ Accident Reporting, Investigation and Analysis
➢ Identification and Assessment of Hazards
➢ Human Aspects and Motivation for Safety
➢ Work Environment (Heat, Noise and Lighting)
